Practising Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam India-US Partnership Embraces Global Interconnectedness

Ritesh Kumar

While it may have taken three-quarters of a century for India and the US to build a robust economic-strategic partnership, the convergence of interests and growing confidence between these two largest democracies is now at its peak.

Both President of the United States Mr. Joe Biden and Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi have recognised the immense potential of this partnership. They have prioritised strengthening semiconductor supply chains, advancing critical technologies, and enhancing defence partnership. The involvement of businesses, academic institutions, and the peaceful and contributory Indian diaspora has played a vital role in fostering goodwill and propelling the relationship forward.

The two democracies are natural partners in both the hard spaces of economics and strategy and the soft spaces of shared values and interests. The relationship holds immense potential to shape the global landscape in the years to come.

DEFENCE DYNAMICS

The strategic relationship between India and the United States has steadily evolved since the end of the Cold War. Both nations have taken significant steps to enhance their defence cooperation, moving beyond a mere buyer-seller relationship. The latest India-US defence deals signify a geo-strategic shift and hold tremendous implications for India's war-fighting capabilities and the overall bilateral strategic partnership.

The India-US defence relations commenced in 1995, with a mutual agreement "to establish defence ties." Over the years, the partnership deepened, culminating in the signing of a "framework of defence relationship" in 2005. Under the framework, initially, India sourced various military platforms from the US, including aircraft like the C-17, C-130, and maritime reconnaissance planes like the Boeing P8I. Notably, these acquisitions did not involve technology transfer.

However, addressing the joint press conference after meeting with visiting Indian Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi, US President Mr. Joe Biden demonstrated a paradigm shift in the bilateral defence relationship by saying, "We have made critical and emerging technologies the pillar of our next-generation partnership."

As evident from the agreements made so far, over the next three decades, the integration of US-origin technology will become an integral part of India's war-fighting capabilities.

US-Origin Engines for Fighter Jets: A significant development is the collaboration between General Electric (GE) and Hindustan Aeronautics Limited (HAL) for the production of GE-F414 engines in India. This technology transfer, with 80% of the engine's technology being shared, marks a substantial strategic shift. Approximately 440 fighter jets to be manufactured in India, including Tejas Mark 1A, Tejas Mark 2, Twin-Engine Deck-Based Fighters (TEDBF), and Advanced Medium Combat Aircraft (AMCA), are expected to incorporate US-origin engines.

Enhanced Capabilities and Co-Development: The higher-powered F414 engine, with its 98 kilo Newton (kN) thrust, will significantly enhance the performance of future Indian fighter jets. The compatibility of the F414 engine with the planned 40 AMCA jets further strengthens the technological cooperation. Additionally, GE has proposed co-developing and co-manufacturing a more powerful 110 kN thrust engine for the subsequent AMCA version. This collaboration showcases a long-term commitment to mutually augmenting indigenous defence capabilities.

INTERVIEW

EN TEAM

The historic meeting between Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi and President Joe Biden during the former's Official State Visit to the United States, holds immense significance, as it ushers in a new era of collaboration between two global powerhouses. The outcomes of their meeting have set the stage for groundbreaking initiatives in defense and technology, reflecting the boldness of ambition demonstrated by both nations. The joint statement issued after the meeting stands as a testament to their unwavering commitment to the agreements reached upon. Shri Pankaj Saran, former Deputy National Security Advisor, sheds light on the transformative change in US policy, the shift in strategic considerations, and the gravity of collaborative propositions.

Q: What are the main highlights of the meeting between Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi and US President Mr. Joe Biden?

A: This meeting signifies a new chapter in India-US relationship, with key takeaways focusing on two major areas: defense and technology. Another important aspect worth noting is the boldness of ambition demonstrated by both sides.

While India and the US have held summits in the past, this particular summit showcased a deliberate decision to significantly enhance their partnership in strategic sectors, particularly technology. The joint statement issued during the summit is particularly noteworthy for its extraordinary and comprehensive approach, placing emphasis on technology right from the beginning, which is unprecedented. The second truly remarkable aspect lies in the exceedingly ambitious plans for defense cooperation, expanding across its widest dimensions.

Q: Does the announcement of groundbreaking initiatives in technology, defense, or even space signify a tangible shift in US policy towards sharing cutting-edge technology with India? What factors could have influenced this transformative change?

A: Undoubtedly, there has been a notable shift. I think the preparations for this began many

Access to Armed Drones: India's acquisition of armed drones, particularly the MQ-9B manufactured by General Atomics, holds immense strategic significance. These drones provide advanced sensors, extended range, endurance, electronic surveillance capabilities, and the ability to carry weapons. With the MQ-9Bs being assembled in India and the establishment of a comprehensive global maintenance and repair facility, India aims to bolster its indigenous defence capabilities. The 24x7 surveillance capability and target precision make these drones instrumental in enhancing India's military readiness.

Strengthening Naval Capabilities: The deployment of armed drones at sea complements India's existing fleet of P8I surveillance planes. The drones enable seamless integration with sonobuoys (underwater surveillance devices) and offer extended focus on targets, further enhancing maritime domain awareness. Additionally, the deployment of drones in the Himalayan region allows for effective monitoring of vast and otherwise inaccessible areas along the India-China border.

Expanding MRO Capabilities: The recent repair of a US Navy ship, the USNS Charles Drew, at L&T's shipyard in Chennai, signifies an important milestone in the strategic partnership. Building on this success, the US Navy is finalising ship repair agreements with Mazagon Docks Limited, Mumbai, and Goa Shipyard. These agreements enable mid-voyage US Navy ships to undergo cost-effective and time-saving repairs in India. The establishment of logistic, repair, and maintenance infrastructure for aircraft and vessels further strengthens the defence industrial roadmap.

Defence Advantages of Space and Semi-Conductors: The collaborative efforts between India and the United States in the domains of space exploration, semiconductors, and information sharing have far-reaching implications for the defence sector. The two democracies have forged a strong partnership in space missions, exemplified by the upcoming joint manned mission to the International Space Station. Additionally, the NASA-ISRO Synthetic Aperture Radar (NISAR) satellite, scheduled for launch in 2024, holds great potential for applications such as snow and glacier studies and coastal monitoring, especially along India's borders with China and Pakistan. This collaboration not only enhances scientific knowledge but also bolsters space-based surveillance capabilities, benefiting the defence sector of both countries. Moreover, India's involvement in the Artemis Accords and the joint construction of a Laser Interferometer Gravitational Wave Observatory further strengthen the mutual interests in space exploration and scientific advancements.

Meanwhile, the semiconductor industry plays a crucial role in military applications, including avionics, guided missiles, and computing systems. Recognising the significance of this sector, India and the US have fostered collaboration to overcome limited domestic capacities and technological advancements. Investments from prominent companies like Micron Technology and Applied Materials, coupled with engineering training by Lam Research, are expected to create an ecosystem that not only benefits the commercial sector but also spills over into military and strategic domains. This collaboration empowers the defence sector with cutting-edge semiconductor technologies, bolstering both nations' defence capabilities and fostering technological self-sufficiency.

Information Sharing and Defence Cooperation: The strengthening of information sharing and defence cooperation between India and the US has substantial implications for security. The placement of Indian liaison officers in key US commands deepens the critical exchange of information, particularly in the undersea domain. The ongoing discussions regarding Security of Supply Arrangement and Reciprocal Defence Procurement Arrangement further enhance supply chain resilience and ensure the uninterrupted availability of defence goods. This collaborative framework enables co-production of advanced systems, collaborative research, testing, and prototyping, thus shaping the future of military power.

Strategic Boost for Indo-Pacific Agenda

With the transfer of critical technologies and the acquisition of advanced military platforms, India enhances its ability to safeguard its territorial integrity and maritime interests. This, in turn, aligns with the US objective of maintaining a free and open Indo-Pacific region. India's improved maritime domain awareness, bolstered by the deployment of armed drones and surveillance capabilities, contributes to the broader intelligence-gathering efforts in the region. These capabilities enable effective monitoring of activities at sea, including potential threats from adversaries. India's strategic shift towards self-reliance also aligns with the US interest in promoting regional stability by encouraging capable allies and partners to shoulder greater responsibilities in safeguarding shared interests. Moreover, by allowing mid-voyage US Navy ships to undergo service and repair in India, both countries benefit from cost-effective and time-saving solutions. This partnership fosters interoperability, enhances naval readiness, and strengthens the collective capabilities of India and the US in the Indo-Pacific. Overall, though technological collaboration, intelligence sharing, and joint operational initiatives, India and the US forge a stronger strategic partnership that bolsters regional security, promotes freedom of navigation, and counterbalances potential threats in the Indo-Pacific.

In the face of multidomain and multifront threats, burden-sharing becomes a coping strategy. India and the US are well-suited to engage in such burden-sharing in the Indo-Pacific region. Nevertheless, while there are growing convergences, both countries must prioritise their own political, economic, and military interests. It is crucial to create opportunities for partnership within the framework of a "Partnership" rather than an "Alliance," as this distinction is likely to persist in the near to midterm.

India's aspiration for self-reliance, encapsulated in the concept of Atamnirbharta, necessitates a pragmatic roadmap for capability building. This includes acquiring critical resources, skills, technology, precision manufacturing capabilities, and financing while overcoming security-related barriers. India's recent defence sector reforms, such as FDI policies, strategic partnerships, indigenous manufacturing, technology transfers, and import restrictions, need to align with the interests of partners and viable business models.

Moreover, defence trade plays a significant role in strategic partnerships, often facilitating 'Transfer of Technology' (ToT). While the two countries have set the ball rolling by agreeing for ToT in the latest deals, sustaining the enabling power of ToT is essential. Furthermore, India's Defence Space and Cyber agencies are in the early stages of development and require strengthening and integration with national structures to collaborate effectively with their US counterparts.

The composition, functioning, and role of defence cooperation mechanisms need to be synchronised and oriented towards collaboration and interoperability in asymmetric domains. Over time, this shift will render concerns over the origin of military platforms insignificant. Hence, steady progress in this realm will depend on navigating the current realities with pragmatism and a deep understanding of each other's national interests and priorities.

OTHER KEY DEALS & PARTNERSHIPS

The foundation of the India-US bilateral relationship is rooted in their shared commitment to defence and strategic cooperation. However, notable progress has been made in expanding their alliance to encompass a more comprehensive and multifaceted approach, as evidenced by the various deals and understandings reached in other significant domains enlisted below:

I. Advanced Telecommunications: India and the United States launched public-private Joint Task Forces to develop and deploy Open RAN (Radio Access Network) systems and advance telecom research and development. India's Bharat 6G and the US Next G Alliance will co-lead this research.

II. Quantum, Advanced Computing, and Artificial Intelligence: India and the United States established a Joint Indo-US Quantum Coordination Mechanism to facilitate joint research in these fields between the public and private sectors of both countries.

III. Cutting-edge Research: The US National Science Foundation announced 35 joint research collaborations with the Indian Department of Science and Technology and signed a cooperative arrangement with the Indian Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology on emerging technologies.

IV. Innovation Handshake: The US-India Commercial Dialogue launched the "Innovation Handshake" to connect the startup ecosystems of both countries, supporting the US-India Initiative on Critical and Emerging Technology (iCET).

V. Fiber Optics Investments: India's Sterlite Technologies Limited invested $100 million in constructing an optical fiber cable manufacturing unit near Columbia, South Carolina, enabling $150 million in annual exports of optical fiber from India.

VI. Visas, Student Exchanges, and More:

♦ Domestic Visa Renewals: The US Department of State will pilot a programme allowing domestic renewals of certain petition-based temporary work visas, eliminating the need for Indian nationals to leave the country for renewal.

♦ New Consulates: The United States intends to open new consulates in Bengaluru and Ahmedabad, while India plans to open a consulate in Seattle and announce two new consulates in the US.

♦ Student Exchanges and Scholarships: A Joint Task Force was launched between the Association of American Universities and leading Indian educational institutions to promote student exchanges and collaborations.

♦ University Research Partnerships: The launch of a university network of Indo-US Global Challenge Institutes was announced, fostering research partnerships and exchanges in agriculture, energy, health, and technology.

VII. Cultural Property: Negotiations continue for a Cultural Property Agreement between the United States and India to prevent illegal trafficking of cultural property and enhance cooperation in protecting and exchanging cultural artifacts.

VIII. Historic Aviation Deals: Air India's agreement with Boeing to acquire over 200 American-made aircraft will support more than one million jobs in the US and contribute to the modernisation of India's civil aviation sector.

IX. Resolving Trade Issues Through Trust: The resolution of six outstanding World Trade Organisation disputes and market access understandings on significant products demonstrate the willingness of both countries to resolve trade issues.

X. Global Stage & Diplomacy:

♦ Indo-Pacific: The United States joined the Indo-Pacific Oceans Initiative to promote a safe and stable maritime domain.

♦ Indian Ocean: An Indian Ocean Dialogue will convene officials from the US and India, along with experts and stakeholders from the region, to enhance regional coordination.

♦ Global Cooperation: The United States and India intend to hold another Global Issues Forum meeting this year to collaborate on challenges like human trafficking, food insecurity, and disaster relief.

♦ Enhancing India's Role in Global Governance: The United States expressed support for India's permanent membership in a reformed UN Security Council, Indian membership in the International Energy Agency, and advancing Indian membership in the Nuclear Suppliers Group. Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi was also invited to the APEC Summit.

XI. Digital Partnership: The United States and India will establish a US-India Global Digital Development Partnership to address development challenges in emerging economies, leveraging technology and resources from both countries.

XII. "Triangular" Cooperation Partnership: The US Agency for International Development and India's Ministry of External Affairs will collaborate on training healthcare experts from Fiji in India to share knowledge and best practices on post-disaster psychosocial and telemedicine services.

XIII. Sustainable Development and Global Health:

♦ Energy Collaboration: India and the United States will work together to achieve their respective climate and

months ago because there was a growing sense of strategic convergence and rethink in the American establishment about the next phase of the relationship. Similarly on the Indian side also, there was a much sharper focus on what India needs from the United State to fulfill its own national development goals. Moreover, there were other geopolitical developments around the world. All these factors catalysed this takeoff of the India-US partnership to the next level as evident from some of the agreements on the defence and technology sectors that have been talked about but never been done in the past.

Q: Does the clear mention in the Joint Statement regarding the shared opposition to cross-border terrorism signify a shift in US policy towards Pakistan considering that the US has many a times referred to Pakistan as an "important partner in the region" in the context of counterterrorism?

A: Pakistan, in the grand scheme of the current Indo-US relationship, holds minimal significance. It has been overshadowed by far more crucial developments from India's perspective. Therefore, Pakistan does not occupy a prominent position in our strategic considerations, nor does it serve as the cornerstone of the India-US partnership as it stands today. While terrorism was acknowledged in the joint statement, it was merely a fraction of the statement's overall significance. The US-Pakistan relationship exists, and we acknowledge it, albeit with vigilant observation. However, the stakes within the India-US relationship are incomparably higher than those involving Pakistan.

Q: PM Modi and President Biden have placed immense emphasis on the establishment of a Trusted Network/Trusted Sources Bilateral Framework. How do you interpret the gravity of this proposition?

A: Essentially, what lies at the core of this proposition is the urgent need for a far deeper integration of the high-tech and defense sectors between India and the United States. It is imperative to forge a resilient supply chain that will solidify mutual trust between both nations. This imperative arises directly from the existing monopoly China holds over these supply chains. The objective here is to establish an alternative supply chain to China, one that serves the interests of both the US industry and India. Our aim is to create a dynamic and self-sustaining supply chain, which we can refer to as a "virtuous cycle." To achieve this, we intend to utilise technology from Western countries while also prioritising the rapid development of our own nation. Now we have a choice - when we need the technology, where to get the technology from. Various sources of technology exist worldwide, including the United States, Europe, Russia, and China. However, from an Indian standpoint, the crucial question lies in identifying the technology source that not only instills comfort and security but also safeguards national interests and bolsters our own capabilities. In this context, the concept of "trusted" supply chains between India and the US assumes paramount importance.

Q: How do you anticipate China's reaction to latest agreements and collaborations between India and the US relating to the defence sector?

A: I have two responses to your question. Firstly, we cannot allow ourselves to be constantly fearful of another nation while pursuing stronger relations with the United States or any other country. We cannot afford to look over our shoulders every time we make progress in a specific sector with a particular nation. That is my initial point and my initial response. Secondly, when it comes to advanced defense and military technology, China has also imported such technology in the past from various sources, including Russia. Therefore, it is entirely justified for India, as a matter of national defense requirement, to seek the best available technology to strengthen our military capabilities. I do not foresee any issue with this approach because the alternative would be to develop the technology ourselves. While we are indeed working towards that goal, it will not happen overnight. In the meantime, we need access to such technology due to the growing threats from our adversaries. Speaking specifically about China, I believe that, in many ways, it is China's actions that are responsible for the progress being achieved in the defense sector between India and the United States. India recognises the imperative of enhancing its defense and military strength, leading to the significant agreements reached on engines, drones, and other aspects that reflect this commitment. Strengthening India's military capabilities has always been an enduring ambition, but what is truly new is the willingness of the United States to offer us this advanced technology.

Q: The US has a highly stringent export control regime. Do you believe that obtaining congressional approval will be feasible for the current Biden administration and India, especially considering the upcoming elections in both countries?

A: From what I understand, there is clear political commitment from the President, the White House, and the National Security Council in the United States to advance collaborations in these areas. This marks not only a starting point but also a breakthrough, considering the political nature of technology denial and sharing. The decision to share technology today is a political one. Undoubtedly, there will be obstacles during implementation, but that should not deter us from pursuing this cooperation. It is natural to encounter differences or difficulties along the way, but I firmly believe that this time, it is genuinely happening, and we will indeed gain access to the kind of technologies that India has long sought, directly bolstering its military strength.

Q: It's quite intriguing that we have chosen to join the Artemis Accord. Does this signify a shift in our policy? Until now, we have predominantly adhered to UN-led roles in the space sector. Will this decision not impact our reputation as proponents of multilateralism under the UN umbrella?

A: Absolutely not. The Artemis program has been on our radar for a considerable time, and our interest in it remains unwavering. Hence, I don't see any contradiction between the two. While we will fulfill our obligations within the United Nations and uphold the principles of multilateralism, it is essential to acknowledge that the UN and its multilateral frameworks have often proven ineffective in providing timely assistance when it was most needed. With the recent announcement of our space policy, the privatisation of the sector, and the substantial investment and job opportunities it entails, there is a growing impetus to not solely rely on these formal institutions for tangible results. Instead, we are embracing bilateral arrangements to expedite progress in areas where we have been lagging. The decision to join the Artemis Accord aligns with this proactive approach, bolstered by the invaluable support extended by the United States. India's ambitious aspirations for advancements in the space sector, as well as other sectors, are complemented by America's genuine willingness to assist in realising these ambitions. Therefore, I see no contradictions or issues at hand. We will actively participate in the Artemis program while fulfilling our obligations within UN frameworks. The Artemis program itself is robust, and we should wholeheartedly move forward with it.

Q: Ahead of the US visit, PM Shri Narendra Modi reiterated the demand for reforms in the UN, particularly emphasising India's candidacy for permanent membership in the United Nations Security Council. With the deepening trust between India and the US at the political level, do you believe we are making progress towards realising this ambition?

A: While I don't believe this visit will directly expedite or bring us closer to obtaining permanent membership in the United Nations Security Council, there are numerous other factors at play in that regard. However, what the United States has done during this visit is recognise India as a major global player, treating us with the respect and acknowledgement that such a status entails. India's competence and role span across various sectors, and this visit signifies that America is ready to acknowledge India's significance as a major player on the world stage. However, in terms of formal membership in the Security Council, I don't foresee this visit making a significant difference. The United States does support India's Security Council membership, but the process itself is separate and ongoing. Nonetheless, the achievements we have made in our relationship with the US during this visit hold great significance on their own merits.

Q: Lastly, will this achievement also enhance our cooperation in intelligence, particularly in the maritime and land domains?

A: Absolutely. I was particularly impressed to see references in the joint statement regarding cooperation in defense and intelligence sharing. Notably, there is a mention of both sides collaborating on underwater domain awareness, which holds significant importance for maritime security. Therefore, I anticipate greater cooperation in the intelligence and security sphere, encompassing various areas such as maritime, land, space, and air. The increased trust between India and the US will undoubtedly manifest in these domains as well.

BEST ENTRY FOR

ISSUE DATED 17 - 23 June 2023

Question: International Day of Yoga is celebrated every year on June 21. Let us know how incorporating yoga into your daily routine has helped you manage stress and improve your mental well-being?

Vivica Dsouza
Mumbai

Incorporating yoga into my everyday schedule has had a profound impact on my ability to manage stress and improve my mental well-being as a young adult working in the dynamic media industry. With the fast pace of my corporate job and the constant use of my phone, finding inner peace seemed unattainable. However, since embracing yoga, I have experienced a remarkable transformation in my stress levels and overall mental state. Commencing my day with a yoga practice has become a sanctuary amidst the chaos. By leaving behind digital distractions and immersing myself in the present moment on my mat, I am able to release physical tension through postures and conscious breathing. Each asana feels like a release of stress, providing me with a clear mind and renewed energy to face the day.

Throughout the day, my phone used to be a perpetual source of anxiety due to constant notifications and messages. Yet, by incorporating the tools I have acquired through yoga, I have established boundaries. Taking short breaks for breathing exercises allows me to regain focus, reduce anxiety, and regain control over my digital interactions. Yoga has also heightened my self-awareness, enabling me to recognize the impact of external stimuli on my well-being. By acknowledging signs of overwhelm and stress, I prioritize self-care during the day. Whether it's finding a peaceful corner for a brief meditation session or engaging in simple yoga poses, I actively nurture my mental health.

In the evenings, yoga once again becomes my refuge. Settling onto my mat, I release the day's pressures and allow the practice to guide me into a state of relaxation. The intentional movements, along with focused breathing and meditation, help me shed accumulated stress. As I roll up my mat, I am left feeling centered, grounded, and ready to embrace the tranquility of the evening. Incorporating yoga into my daily routine has undoubtedly revolutionized my stress management and fostered a sense of equilibrium amid the rapid pace of life in the media field. It has equipped me with the necessary tools to navigate professional demands while prioritizing my mental well-being. Through yoga, I have discovered that even amidst the chaos, finding moments of peace and serenity is not only possible but essential for my overall happiness and success.
