Expanding India's Renewable Energy Mix for Achieving 'Net Zero'

Ritesh Kumar

India's commitment to achieving netzero greenhouse gas emissions by 2070 makes the expansion of its renewable energy portfolio an urgent imperative. While solar and wind energy have grown rapidly over the past two decades, supported by strong policy and financial frameworks, the country's renewable energy basket remains heavily concentrated in these two sources. Diversifying the energy mix is therefore critical, not only to strengthen energy security but also to ensure resilience against the variability of intermittent renewables.

The National Policy on Geothermal Energy 2025, notified by the Ministry of New and Renewable Energy (MNRE) on September 15, 2025, represents a major step in this direction. Geothermal energy, derived from the Earth's internal heat, offers unique advantages, including reliable baseload power and potential for site-specific applications in remote, tribal, and island regions. According to the International Energy Agency (IEA), India, along with China and the United States, holds among the world's largest prospects for next-generation geothermal energy, with an estimated capacity of 4.2 GW by 2035 and nearly 100 GW by 2045.

The policy aims to reposition geothermal energy as a strategic pillar of India's renewable energy framework. It seeks to advance research and exploration. deploy geothermal technologies for electricity and direct-use applications, leverage synergies with the oil and gas sector, promote public-private partnerships, and encourage indigenous technology development. By doing so, the policy intends to enhance India's energy security while supporting the country's long-term climate commitments.

This article examines the scope, objectives, and potential implications of the new geothermal policy. It situates geothermal energy within India's broader renewable energy strategy, analyses the policy instruments designed to address sectoral challenges, and highlights the role geothermal can play in providing a resilient, inclusive, and decarbonised energy future.

The Rationale for Harnessing Geothermal Energy

Geothermal energy is derived from the Earth's internal heat, manifested through natural phenomena such as hot springs, geysers, and subsurface heat reservoirs. In comparison with other renewable sources, it offers several notable advantages:

 Reliable Baseload Power: A key advantage of geothermal energy is its s India intensifies its pursuit of As India Interiorines its parameter from the nactment of the National Policy on Geothermal Energy signifies a landmark intervention in shaping the nation's sustainable energy agenda. Designed to harness the vast reserves of thermal energy embedded within the Earth's crust, this policy not only marks an important step in diversifying India's clean energy portfolio but also holds the potential to generate a wide spectrum of new employment opportunities across scientific, technical, and managerial domains. To appreciate the scope of these opportunities, it is necessary to first examine the fundamental operating principles of a geothermal power plant.

How Does a Geothermal Power Plant Work?

The basic setup of a geothermal power plant focuses on extracting heat energy from below the Earth's surface and converting it into electrical power. Unlike solar or wind energy, geothermal energy is available 24/7, making it a reliable renewable source.

Core Mechanism and Components

Drilling Wells: Deep wells are drilled to tap into geothermal reservoirs. For example, India's first geothermal power project in Puga Valley, Ladakh, drilling is underway for a well as deep as 1,000 metres.

Energy Extraction: Subterranean fluids at extremely high temperatures—often above 200°C- are brought to the surface.

Fluid Management: The extracted geothermal fluids, rich in dissolved minerals, must be carefully managed. After heat extraction, fluids are re-injected underground to maintain ecological balance.

Power Generation: The heat (in the form of steam or hot water) drives turbines, which generate electricity. Such plants thrive in tectonically active areas.

Mastering Thermodynamics, Fluid Mechanics, and Energy Systems Design

The three disciplines that form the backbone for a successful career in geothermal revolution are:

- geothermal revolution are:

 1. Thermodynamics: to understand
- and optimise energy conversion.
 Fluid Mechanics: to manage geothermal fluids safely and sustainably.

3. Energy Systems Design: to integrate complex systems into efficient, real-world power plants.

Thermodynamics: Turning Heat into Power

Thermodynamics is the science of energy— how it moves, transforms, and interacts with the environment. In geothermal power generation, it is the key to converting underground heat into usable electricity. Knowledge of thermodynamics equips you to design turbines, heat exchangers, and power cycles that maximise energy efficiency.

Geothermal reservoirs store enormous amounts of heat, but inefficient conversion can waste energy. Understanding thermodynamic principles ensures that you can optimise performance while reducing operational costs.

Fluid Mechanics: Managing the Subsurface Flow

Geothermal energy is essentially energy carried by fluid— hot water or steam— beneath the Earth's surface. Fluid mechanics is the science that helps you understand and control this flow. Whether one aims to be a drilling technician or reservoir engineer, fluid mechanics teaches how to safely extract geothermal fluids, manage pressure, and prevent leaks.

Geothermal reservoirs are complex, high-pressure systems. Poor fluid management can cause operational failures or environmental hazards. Understanding fluid dynamics ensures sustainability and

Energy Systems Design: Turning Science into Real-World Solutions

While thermodynamics explains how energy is transformed, and fluid mechanics governs how it moves, energy systems design integrates these principles into functional, reliable, and sustainable power plants. Professionals skilled in energy systems design can plan plant layouts, optimise turbine integration, and ensure smooth connection to the electricity grid.

Geothermal projects are often located in remote or ecologically sensitive areas. Designing efficient, safe, and environmentally responsible systems requires a holistic understanding of energy systems. Energy systems design is particularly important if your career goal is plant operation, management, or system optimisation, ensuring that the technology you build delivers reliable and sustainable electricity.

Career Roadmap

Mastery of thermodynamics, fluid mechanics, and energy systems design will make an aspirant indispensable to the emerging geothermal power sector—where scientific insight meets practical impact. Start with a strong undergraduate foun-dation in mechanical, civil, petroleum, or energy engineering, then pursue postgraduate specialisation or professional training in these core disciplines.

Stage 1: Foundational Education (Undergraduate Level)

At this stage, the goal is to build a strong grounding in engineering and physical sciences.

Recommended Degrees:

- Mechanical Engineering
- · Energy Engineering
- · Civil Engineering
- Petroleum Engineering
- · Earth Sciences / Geology

Practical experience is equally important, and can be gained through laboratory work in heat transfer and fluid dynamics, participation in small-scale renewable energy projects, and internships at energy companies or research institutes to bridge theoretical knowledge with real-world applications.

Stage 2: Specialisation (Postgraduate/Professional Training)

After acquiring foundational education in any of the recommended UG Degrees, it is advisable to acquire expertise in geothermal-specific applications

Recommended Courses:

- M.Sc in Renewable Energy / Energy Systems / Geothermal Engineering
- Certifications in Drilling Technology or Reservoir Management
- Workshops on geothermal plant operations

Aspirants should engage in modelling geothermal reservoirs to understand subsurface fluid dynamics, participate in designing small-scale pilot geothermal plants to apply theoretical principles in real-world settings, and undertake hands-on fieldwork with wells, turbines, and reinjection systems to develop the technical skills necessary for efficient and sustainable energy extraction.

Stage 3: Entry-Level Roles

At this stage, you are ready for entry-level roles and the potential positions include:

- Geothermal Engineer
- Drilling Technician
 Reservoir Engineer
- · Plant Operations Trainee

In entry-level roles, professionals are responsible for applying thermodynamic principles to optimise energy extraction monitoring subsurface fluid flow and pressure, and supporting day-to-day plant operations and maintenance. These responsibilities require hands-on technical skills, including calculating energy efficiency and losses, managing well pressure and fluid reinjection, and operating turbines, pumps, and heat exchangers to ensure that the plant functions safely, efficiently, and sustainably.

Stage 4: Advanced Leadership Roles

As professionals gain experience and deepen their expertise in geothermal power, they can progress into advanced and leadership roles such as:

- Senior Engineer
- · Plant Operations Manager

- · Energy Systems Designer
- Project Manager (Geothermal Development)

In advanced leadership roles, professionals are responsible for designing large-scale geothermal plants. integrating geothermal power into regional electricity grids, overseeing sustainable and efficient energy extraction, and leading interdisciplinary teams of engineers and scientists. These responsibilities draw on a high level of technical expertise, including advanced thermo-dynamic analysis for plant optimisation, complex fluid mechanics for reservoir management, and holistic energy systems design with a focus on sustainability, ensuring that geothermal projects operate efficiently while meeting environmental and operational standards.

Stage 5: Thought Leadership / Policy Influence

Building on advanced technical and managerial experience, professionals can transition into roles in thought leadership and policy influence, where they shape the future of geothermal energy through strategic consulting, policy development, and pioneering research. Potential roles are:

Renewable Energy Consultant

Dated: 17.09. 2025

· Energy Policy Advisor

 Research Scientist in Geothermal Technology

In thought leadership and propolicy-oriented roles, fessionals contribute by shaping the country's geothermal policies and regulations, driving innovation in energy efficiency and sustainability, and mentoring the next generation of geothermal professionals. These positions allow experienced experts to influence the strategic direction of the sector, promote best practices, and ensure that India's geothermal energy development remains both technologically advanced and environmentally responsible.

Peripheral and Supporting Roles Beyond core technical and leadership positions, the geothermal power generation ecosystem encompasses a wide spectrum of peripheral and supporting roles that are vital to successful the planning. implementation, and operation of projects. These include professionals in construction and infrastructure development, such as civil engineers, site supervisors, and skilled trades people, who are responsible for building and maintaining wellheads, pipelines, plant structures, and ancillary facilities in often remote and challenging terrains. Environmental scientists, ecologists, and safety specialists play a critical role in monitoring the ecological impact of geothermal operations, ensuring compliance with regulations, managing risks, and implementing sustainable practices. The sector also requires expertise in logistics, procurement, and supply chain management, coordinating the transportation of specialised drilling equipment, turbines, and materials to geographically isolated sites while optimising cost and efficiency. Additionally, IT and instrumentation professionals are in demand to manage monitoring systems, automate plant operations, and analyse real-time data from wells turbines and reinjection systems, supporting predictive maintenance and operational efficiency. Beyond technical support, the ecosystem relies on finance, human resources, and training personnel who ensure smooth organisational operations, staff development and workforce upskilling. Collectively, these supporting roles are essential to the functioning seamless of geothermal projects, providing aspirants with a diverse range of career pathways that extend well beyond engineering and science, while contributing meaningfully to India's renewable energy ambitions and the sustainable expansion of its geothermal sector.

Expanding India's Renewable Energy Mix ...

ability to provide a steady and uninterrupted supply of electricity. Unlike solar power, which depends on sunlight, or wind power, which relies on wind speed and direction, geothermal systems operate around the clock. This reliability is reflected in their high capacity utilisation rates, which often exceed by 80 percent.

- Regional Potential: India has significant geothermal resources spread across different regions. According to the Geological Survey of India (GSI), there are 381 identified hot springs in the country, with an estimated potential of about 10.6 GW. These resources are concentrated in specific geological zones such as the Himalayan region, the Cambay Graben in Gujarat, and the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, making them suitable for region-specific energy solutions.
- Multiple Applications: Geothermal energy is not limited to generating electricity. It can also be directly applied in several practical ways, including district heating for urban areas, greenhouse farming to support agriculture, aquaculture for fish farming, food drying and processing, and industrial heating processes. Additionally, Ground Source Heat Pumps (GSHPs) use shallow geothermal resources to provide efficient heating and cooling for buildings, which can significantly reduce energy costs.

Key Features of the Policy

Scope of Application

The policy identifies three main ways geothermal energy can be used:

- Electricity Generation: Geothermal heat can be converted into electricity using different types of power plants, such as dry steam, flash, binary cycle, and Organic Rankine Cycle (ORC) systems. The policy also supports advanced technologies like Enhanced Geothermal Systems (EGS), which can extract heat from areas where natural water flow is limited.
- Direct-Use Applications: Geothermal energy can be used directly without converting it into electricity. This includes heating greenhouses, storing agricultural products in cold storage, supporting aquaculture, industrial heating, and even promoting geothermal tourism.
- 3. Ground Source Heat Pumps (GSHPs): Shallow geothermal heat can be used for efficiently heating and cooling buildings in different climate zones. GSHPs provide a sustainable way to meet energy needs for homes, offices, and public buildings.

Integration with Oil and Gas Infrastructure

The policy introduces an innovative approach of repurposing abandoned oil and gas wells for geothermal energy production. This reduces exploration risks and lowers the initial investment costs, while making productive use of existing fossil fuel infrastructure in a low-carbon way.

Financial and Fiscal Support

Geothermal projects require significant upfront investment (around ₹36 crore per MW) and carry exploration risks. To encourage development, the policy provides:

- Financing Measures: Support through Viability Gap Funding (VGF), concessional loans, green bonds, and international grants.
- Fiscal Incentives: Benefits such as import duty exemptions, GST waivers, tax holidays, accelerated depreciation, and property tax relief for GSHP users.
- Risk Mitigation: Government funding for research and pilot projects, along with options like revenuesharing or milestone-based payments to reduce financial risk.

Governance and Regulatory Framework

The policy provides for a single-window clearance mechanism at the state level, allocation of geothermal blocks for exploration and development, and streamlined coordination with the Ministry of Petroleum and Natural Gas for overlapping oilfields. Geothermal projects are also integrated into national frameworks such as Renewable Purchase Obligations (RPOs) and the Carbon Credit Trading Scheme, ensuring parity with other renewable technologies.

Capacity Building, Knowledge Sharing, and Job Creation

To address India's limited technical base, the policy calls for the establishment of Centres of Excellence in Geothermal Energy, international collaborations with pioneering geothermal nations, and promotion of indigenous technologies for drilling, reservoir management, and downhole monitoring. This will generate jobs in several ways:

- Skilled Technical Jobs: Establishing and operating Centres of Excellence will require engineers, geologists, technicians, and research scientists, creating employment in both academic and applied research fields.
- Training and Education: Programmes for training local engineers and technicians in geothermal drilling, reservoir management, and monitoring technologies will expand the workforce skilled in renewable energy technologies.
- Technology Development and Manufacturing: Promoting indigenous technologies for drilling equipment, downhole monitoring, and geothermal systems will encourage the growth of local manufacturing and R&D sectors, creating jobs in production, design, and innovation.
- 4. Project Implementation Jobs: As trained professionals enter the workforce, geothermal projects— whether power plants, GSHP systems, or direct-use applications— will require operational staff, project managers, and maintenance teams, generating long-term employment opportunities.
- International Collaboration Opportunities: Partnerships with pioneering geothermal nations can bring foreign-funded projects, exchange programmes, and consultancy roles, adding both skilled and semi-skilled jobs.

Economic and Industrial Implications

Geothermal energy offers significant economic and industrial advantages beyond electricity generation. Its direct-use applications— including heating for greenhouses, aquaculture, cold storage, food drying, and industrial processes— can reduce reliance on fossil fuels for thermal energy. This not only lowers operational costs for businesses but also contributes to decarbonising key sectors of the economy, supporting India's broader energy transition.

In agriculture, geothermal heat can extend the growing season in greenhouses, improve crop yields, and facilitate cold storage and food processing, thereby reducing post-harvest losses. In aquaculture, controlled geothermal heating can boost productivity and enable year-round operations. In industries such as paper, textiles, and chemical processing, geothermal heat can replace conventional fuel-based thermal energy, cutting greenhouse gas emissions and operational expenses.

The policy's emphasis on indigenous technology development— including drilling equipment, reservoir management, and downhole monitoring— can stimulate local manufacturing, research and development, and service industries, creating skilled employment opportunities and reducing dependence on imported equipment.

Moreover, geothermal projects may allow mineral co-extraction, including valuable resources such as lithium, boron, and silica. This can further enhance project economics and foster the development of domestic industrial ecosystems in mining, chemical processing, and high-tech materials sectors, positioning India as a producer of both clean energy and critical industrial inputs.

Overall, geothermal energy has the potential to generate a multi-dimensional economic impact: reducing fossil fuel use, supporting industrial growth, creating employment, and promoting technological innovation across multiple sectors.

Conclusion

The National Policy on Geothermal Energy 2025 represents a decisive attempt to expand the horizons of India's renewable energy strategy by tapping into an underutilised resource. If implemented effectively, geothermal energy can serve as a reliable baseload complement to variable renewables, a localised energy solution for remote regions, and a decarbonisation pathway for industrial and thermal sectors.

By linking geothermal with oil and gas expertise, enabling fiscal and financial support, and fostering indigenous innovation, the policy seeks to de-risk the sector and lay the foundations for long-term development. While challenges of cost and risk remain formidable, geothermal energy has the potential to evolve into a critical component of India's energy transition— contributing not only to the 2070 Net Zero Goal but also to a more diverse, resilient, and regionally equitable renewable energy future.

■ President Confers 71st National Film Awards, Mohanlal Receives Top

President Smt. Droupadi Murmu conferred the 71st National Film Awards in New Delhi on September 23 celebrating excellence in Indian cinema. Legendary actor Mohanlal received the prestigious Dadasaheb Phalke Award for his lifetime contribution to the film industry. Highlighting cinema's societal impact, the President urged filmmakers to produce content that raises awareness and called for greater global recognition of Indian films. She also noted the growing prominence of women-centric films as a positive social trend. Other major awards presented included Best Actor to Shah Rukh Khan (Jawan) and Vikrant Massey (12th Fail), Best Actress to Rani Mukerji (Mrs. Chatterjee vs. Norway), Best Director to Sudipto Sen (The Kerala Story), and Best Popular Film to Rocky Aur Rani Kii Prem Kahaani. Singers Shilpa Rao and PVNS Rohit won the Best Female and Male Playback Singer awards, while Mau: The Spirit Dreams of Cheraw (Mizo) won Best Non-Feature Film.

Vice President Releases Books on PM Modi's Speeches

Vice President Shri C.P. Radhakrishnan released four compiled books of Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi's speeches titled Sabka Sath Sabka Vikas, Sabka Vishvash Sabka Prayas published by Publications Division in New Delhi on September 22. The books cover selected speeches from the 4th and 5th years of PM Modi's second term, highlighting his vision for good governance and public service. Vice President Shri Radhakrishnan praised Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi as an inspiration for millions, noting his determination to serve humanity. Rajya Sabha Deputy Chairman Shri Harivansh and I&B Minister Shri Ashwini Vaishnaw also lauded PM Modi's communication skills and initiatives, including India's largest food security programme, Jan Dhan accounts, and sanitation projects.

World Food India 2025 Highlights India's Food Security, Culinary Heritage

Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi, addressing the 4th edition of World Food India 2025 in New Delhi, underlined India's growing role in global food security and its attractiveness as a key investment hub in the food sector. He said the country's strong domestic demand, rising food production, and use of new technologies are creating large-scale employment opportunities, particularly in rural areas. The fourday event, organised at Bharat Mandapam in New Delhi from September 25-28 also featured a special Ministry of Tourism initiative titled "World Food India - Reviving the Culinary Treasures of India". The programme showcased India's rich culinary heritage, forgotten food traditions, and indigenous ingredients with the potential to drive both exports and food tourism. Experts highlighted how the revival of millets, heirloom grains, and Ayurveda-based food practices can generate livelihoods, boost agri-based entrepreneurship, and open global market opportunities. The event brought together farmers, start-ups, chefs, and entrepreneurs, with masterclasses, panel discussions, and food exhibitions demonstrating how India's food ecosystemspanning production to gastronomy— can create sustainable jobs while contributing to global food security

India Tests Agni-Prime Missile from Rail-Based Launcher

India successfully test-fired its Intermediate Range Agni-Prime missile from a rail-based mobile launcher, a first-ofits-kind achievement for the country on September 24. The missile, with a range of up to 2,000 km, is equipped with advanced features and designed for quick deployment. The rail-based launcher can move freely across the railway network, offering cross-country mobility and the ability to launch at short notice while remaining less detectable. This enhances the flexibility and survivability of India's missile arsenal compared to fixed launch sites. Defence Minister Shri Rajnath Singh congratulated DRDO, the Strategic Forces Command and the Armed Forces on this occasion

WaveX Opens 7 New Incubation Centres for Media Startups

WaveX, the Government of India-supported startup accelerator platform, has launched seven new incubation centres to boost innovation in media, animation and entertainment. The centres will be set up at IIMC campuses in Delhi, Jammu, Dhenkanal, Kottayam, Amravati, as well as at FTII Pune and SRFTI Kolkata. WaveX provides early-stage startups with access to advanced infrastructure, mentorship, networking opportunities and global exposure. It has been designed to nurture talent across film production, gaming, editing and digital content creation, while also connecting startups with media units like Doordarshan, Akashvani and PIB. With these new centres, WaveX aims to build a nationwide ecosystem for creative entrepreneurs, offering uniform facilities similar to those at IICT Mumbai

EAM Dr. S. Jaishankar Calls for Zero Tolerance on Terrorism at G20

External Affairs Minister Dr. S. Jaishankar called for zero tolerance towards terrorism at the G20 Foreign Ministers' meeting in New York on September 25 citing operations like Operation Sindoor as vital to global peace and development. He emphasised that those combating terrorism perform a service to the international community. Dr. Jaishankar also criticised the double standards in applying sanctions, highlighting how they disrupt supplies, raise costs, and disproportionately affect the Global South. He stressed the link between international peace and development, urging the world to involve capable nations in resolving conflicts and reaffirm multilateralism as the foundation for a safer, fairer global order

India Inaugurates First Overseas Defence Manufacturing Facility in Morocco

Shri Rajnath Singh and his Moroccan counterpart Defence Minister Mr. Abdelatif Loudyi inaugurated Tata Advanced Systems Limited's (TASL) defence manufacturing facility in Berrechid, Morocco on September 23, 2025. The plant, the largest in Morocco and the first by an Indian private company in Africa, will produce indigenously developed Wheeled Armoured Platforms for the Royal Moroccan Army, with initial deliveries starting next month. Defence Minister Shri Rajnath Singh described the facility as a milestone in India-Morocco strategic ties and a step towards India's vision of Aatmanirbhar Bharat, providing advanced technology and high-quality products globally. The facility has already generated direct and indirect employment, strengthened local supplier networks, and will serve as a hub for exports and defence collaboration between Africa and Europe.
